

Who wants to ride over 300 miles on a bike to raise money for tree research and education?

I do, actually. In September, my bike and I will travel to North and South Carolina to ride the 2026 Tour des Trees to benefit TREE Fund. I've signed up to ride over 300 miles in five days and raise $3,700 for TREE Fund because I believe that the tree research and environmental education this ride supports are critical to the well-being of our communities and all of us who inhabit them.

Urban trees are vital to our survival. They reduce air pollution, sequester carbon, control erosion, shelter us from heat and wind, and add beauty to our lives. Trees give us respite from the stressors of our daily lives, but did you know that living in cities is stressful for trees? Pests, diseases, construction, pollution, and neglect put the trees in our communities at risk every day. The research and education funded by TREE Fund via the Tour des Trees helps to ensure that tree care professionals are well equipped with best practices and the latest techniques to keep the trees we live with healthy and thriving.

So, do you want to cycle over 300 miles with me to support this important cause?

If not, here's another option: would you donate $100 (or whatever amount you feel comfortable with) to my campaign and I'll do the riding? I would really appreciate your support! TREE Fund Partners defray event costs, so your donation to my campaign will support tree research and education programs.
